Create a New Project The first thing you need to do is make sure you have the latest version of Photoshop installed and open it. Your project will be a new document, so it's a good idea to make sure you have the latest version. The easiest thing to do is to just open a blank image. Either a new image or an image file that you have saved previously would be appropriate, but remember, you need to make sure the image size is either 800 x 600 or 1024 x 768, depending on whether you intend to print the image or create a web graphics project. 2. Understand the Basics Let's begin by understanding the terminology so you can accurately describe the Photoshop tools we will use in the rest of this tutorial. A layer is a collection of pixels that you place on top of other layers. The pixels can be solid black, white, or another color to represent an image. A group is a collection of layers that you can manipulate together. Every layer can have its own group. There is no logical reason for having a group in Photoshop, but it is a useful feature that allows you to move groups around together while maintaining the layers they contain. You can place pixels on the canvas at any angle relative to the origin point (the center of the canvas, or the same as the Image > Canvas Size dialog). The selection tool is used to create or modify the selection of pixels or a group of pixels. You can make selections out of a pre-existing shape such as a line, circle, or path, or you can make selections of pixels in a new layer or the background layer. The layer palette allows you to quickly add or remove layers from your document. You can hide or show layers with a layer mask. A layer mask is a way to control which part of an image is visible. By Richard Lambert BBC News, Vienna Play could be used to create freewheeling city parks Vienna is set to become the European city where people can play and party in public. It should be the first European city to legalise ballrooms, discos, street parties and other social events of a very long-for-Europe variety. The new city limits - which will stretch from the iconic Heldenplatz of ancient Vienna to the banks of the Danube - will soon be occupied by urbanites thirsty for a bit of space to play. The plans to open up Vienna's party areas are the first of an ambitious programme of changes to expand the metropolis. And on some parts of the map, the city's nightlife already extends to the 24-hour mark. But if thousands of Viennese really want to party, they have to do it under the gaze of more than 1,500 stewards checking for drunkenness, drug possession, noise pollution and other infringements of a collective peace. In the capital, councils have to keep a lid on the nightlife in most other cities. It's not about the quantity of fun, as much as the quality of fun Karl-Heinz Fleder Vienna's Senator Austria's capital was to be at the forefront of a Europe-wide clampdown on excessive nightlife. In December, Vienna's senate voted to adopt strict rules on the opening hours of bars, clubs and discos. A rezoning of the city's squares, for instance, will have to be submitted to the senate. This is the first step towards total prohibition in Austria, which has no special tradition of partying. Yet party animals are flourishing in Vienna, where students and foreigners can leave the imposed restrictions at home. With a population of 1.7 million, a workforce of 500,000 and a reputation for restlessness as strong as its historic significance, Vienna is currently enjoying a 15% rise in night-time employment. And with its current legal system, the city simply can't accommodate every entertainment venue in the western district at once. It's not about the quantity of fun, as much as the quality of fun. "The fewer official time limits on parties, the better," says Karl-Heinz Fleder, political adviser for the Ethical Society in Vienna. "We now have the opportunity to experiment, the experiment was long overdue. That's why we're really the Mecca for current European experimentation." The imposition of rules may be annoying

The gene for high-dose (2-methoxy-3-(4-methyl-7-nitro-2-1,3-benzoxadiazol-5-yl)phenyl)pyridinium (N-methyl-4-nitropyridinium) ion transport in human erythrocytes. We report the finding of a functional mutation in the nucleotide-binding domain of the human band 3 protein resulting in a high-affinity transport system for the cation 2-methoxy-3-(4-methyl-7-nitro-2-1,3-benzoxadiazol-5-yl)phenyl)pyridinium (N-methyl-4-nitropyridinium) ion (MN(+). Our genetic analysis of 52 Caucasians led to the identification of 1 mutant allele, A(N476), in 9 heterozygotes (type 0 heterozygotes), and 1 mutant allele, G(N476), in a heterozygote from another ethnic group. The other heterozygote was a compound heterozygote with the A(N476) allele plus another mutation at another locus (the structural gene for band 3) that abolished transport of MN(+) ions. The G(N476) allele is a null allele, since the apparent Km for MN(+) was increased to 104 mM. The screening of 182 unrelated controls revealed none of the heterozygotes, but 2 of the controls carried the A(N476) allele (p # Copyright (C) 2006 Python Software Foundation # Author: Barry Warsaw # Acknowledgements: Nick Coghlan, Andrew Kwong # Thanks to
